

WORKBOOK – SECTION FIVE

PEEK, SPLIT-ATTENTION, AND ENTRY DESIGN

Use this section to design how attention enters room and what might quietly steal it.

OPENING ENTRY

22. What PEEK type will you use first: curiosity, challenge, connection, humor, visual shock, or something else?

23. Describe the specific opening. What does the learner see, feel, hear, or do in the first 5 minutes?

24. What emotional or cognitive state are you trying to create?

SPLIT-ATTENTION AUDIT

25. List the biggest split-attention risks in your environment: screens, tabs, clutter, stress, tone, unclear direction, hunger, embarrassment, or something else.

26. What can you remove, soften, simplify, or sequence differently to reduce those leaks?

SCREENS AND RE-ENTRY

27. Where is screen use truly useful here, and where might low-tech or no-tech create better presence?

28. How will you re-open attention at the midpoint when energy naturally drops?

29. How will you open the final, hardest section so the learner leans in instead of bracing away?
